It might well have been imagined that the Viceroy Li Hung-chang would have been above resorting to such a pitiless device to gratify his pride and self-consequence as the detention of the British Minister outside his gates. But it would appear that he shares in the proverbial weakness of his countrymen. At least it is scarcely probable that Mr. WADE would have been allowed to exhaust his patience waiting outside the doors of His Excellency's yamen by the attendants on their own responsibility. It is possible certainly that they slightly exceeded instructions and prolonged the delay Chinese officials delight to impose upon foreigners before admitting them to audience. But it cannot be doubted that they obeyed injunctions in keeping Her Majesty's Representative in the bracing sun outside the inhospitable gate. Mr. WADE acted, as it seemed him, with dignity and spirit. He did not flume and fume, but calmly waited for some ten minutes, and then left. He very properly refused to return, when importuned to do so by the Viceroy's runner, who pursued and overtook him. He is reported to have said, "I have made my visit, and now I am going home; give my compliments to the Viceroy, and tell him I am sorry I could not see him when I called upon him." There was confusion and dismay at the Yamen when this rebuke was reported. It was obvious that the thing had been carried too far. It was necessary that some explanation should be given, and it was difficult to frame a plausible excuse. The interview had been arranged the day before, the time fixed, and a messenger had gone ahead to announce the approach of the British Minister. No valid excuse could therefore be offered. No doubt the apology tendered Mr. WADE was ample enough, and the blame was of course laid on the shoulders of the wily men who attend at the doorway of the yamen. And, to give colour to this aspect of the case those unlucky officials have, we are told, been degraded and dismissed. Mr. WADE knew how to appreciate it all, but could not, do otherwise than accept the explanation. But it is to be hoped that he has, by his dignified action, read the Viceroy, and other Chinese officials, a lesson for the future, which we trust may have a good effect. The Chinese are too fond of showing the insolence of office, especially to foreigners, when it can be safely indulged in. The sooner they learn that it is both despised and resented the better for them, or they may soon day venture too far in this direction.

The next International Telegraph Congress will be held in London in 1878.

Dr. FAUCKE has been presented at Mülheim on the Rhine, place he represents in the Prussian Parliament, with an address bearing 10,000 signatures. The spokesman of the democratic party in that electorate district of Mülheim, which is engaged in political activity with intellectual culture, had for this very reason selected as its representative the Minister of Public Worship, who was the representative of the intellectual and religious freedom of Germany. The North German Gazette of the 6th ult. published an article upon the subject, in which it says, "The great dissidents, the priests of Madrid in fact, did not prevent it from being disclosed. Cuba is deriving the resources of that nation more hardly, perhaps than the civil war itself; and the Treasury is in such a state, that the Government can pay neither the army nor the navy. It would be foolish to blame the unfortunate young monarch for this accumulation of misery. He can do nothing but appeal to the good motives of his subjects, and to give as hopefully address protest to the eastward."

The notifications of the Treaty between China and Peru have at last been exchanged. On the 7th instant this ceremony took place at the Viceroy's Yamen, between Dr. ELMBURG and H. E. TIRE, the late Foo-tai of Kiangsu, and now associated with Li Hung-chang in the direction of Foreign Affairs. Thus, after many delays, Peru and China have entered into a diplomatic relationship, and there is nothing to hinder the Peruvian plenipotentiary from establishing his Legation at Peking. Dr. ELMBURG will not be likely to lose much more time. He has already lost a good deal, and the Peruvian Government are anxious to set on foot their new scheme of emigration without any needless delay. We may therefore soon expect to hear something more definite with regard to the proposed line of steamships between Peru and China. It is difficult, however, to say which port will be chosen for the head-quarters of the proposed emigration. Certainly not Macao. The Chinese Government would not fail to object to any coils traffic being re-opened at that port. It will therefore be either conducted from Hongkong or direct from one of the Treaty Ports. But whatever place may be fixed upon as the port of departure, it is to be hoped that the emigrant will be seconded with care, treated with humanity, and scandal of all sorts avoided. The business of organizing them should not be left too much to native agents, for they invariably manage to make opportunities for squeezing, while they engage without hesitation men quite unsuitable, and do not scruple to deceive them in various particulars. To obtain really good labourers, and not idle and vicious loafers, whose only anxiety is to get an advance and then escape if possible, requires strict supervision. The lessons of the past will, it may be presumed, be far remembrance to provide for all this. If the emigration is to be successful in the future it can of course only be by observing such precautions: The Peruvian Government have exposed themselves desirous that the free agency of the emigrants should be guaranteed, and the Treaty provides that the Chinese in Peru shall be placed on a footing of equality as regards legal procedure with that enjoyed by the subjects of the most favoured nation. Those who are desirous of availing themselves of the services of the Emperor's agents, will be advised to have a caution.

A YOUNG HOUSE BREAKER.

A lad named Yip-ak, and his wife, were charged by Dr. KEAN with robbing a house in the garden of the Chinese Consul. It appears the second person was deserting her husband, leaving a small sick child in his care. The husband said she was quite welcome to go, if she took the child, but she would not, insisting he refused to provide for either it or herself. Her Worship said she was a cruel woman to leave her sick child. However, as she knew nothing of the case beyond what the prosecutor said, he advised her to take a road with a caution.

A SILENTY DOING HIS DUTY.

The writer of European gossip in the Pioneer tells the following story. Suppose we conclude in killing a flower, or tearing off one, gathered in the gardens of Schonbrunn Palace, near Vienna. The Archduke Francis Charles, father of the emperor, was walking for days together, well mounted, and armed with a pistol, in a road with a rose-bush. When he reached the rose, he stopped, and said, "I am well aware that the Empress is enquiring in the tribunals, and will be open to foreigner, also, though European culture and civilization may not at once find a resting-place in the new domain, geographical knowledge will be probably enriched."
